

TEACHING NETWORK – final session in 2014

Networked Teachers: A story of open, connected educators

The Centre for Tertiary Teaching and Learning invites staff to a teaching network discussion with Alan Levine.

When Friday, 3 October 2014
from 10am to 12 noon

Where B block ground floor room B.G.24

Alan Levine is a pioneer on the web from back in the early 1990's and is still an innovator in using digital technology to improve and bring new opportunities for learning. He has been blogging and sharing for longer than he can remember and is an Open educator in all senses of the word. He has recently been exploring new ways to develop narrative and modes of communication such as 50+ Web 2.0 Ways To Tell a Story, the engaging PechaFlickr, and a portable StoryBox).

He has recently been instructional technology specialist at the University of Mary Washington, following leadership positions at the New Media Consortium (creators of the Horizon Report) and the Maricopa Community Colleges. He also teaches and learns on the groundbreaking open digital storytelling class, DS106.

When possible, he enjoys the peace of a little cabin in Strawberry, Arizona. His interests include digital photography, biking, bending WordPress to his whims, and randomly dipping into the infinite river of the internet.
